Abrea Henry, was one of my closest friends. I helped her when she was homeless and had no one else to help her. I remember when we hitch hiked to another town because you didn't want to call your mom for help and get in trouble, I remember walking on the streets and being henri as children. I remember the good and the bad and everything in the middle. How we met was the funny story, I met abrea when I tried to kill myself back in 2014 and we ended up being put in Lakeland together!! We both knew we wanted to hangout after we got out so we helped each other until one of us got out. She taught me a lot of things, like to stay strong because there's always gonna be a light at the end of the tunnel. And that family isn't always blood. I love you abrea, I have so many pictures and videos of us together laughing and running to each other in the streets. I miss you and I'm finally getting closure. I love you, and I know your in better place with better people and food❤️
